

At TCS, teaching from a biblical worldview means grounding every subject, classroom practice, and interaction in God’s truth, using Scripture as the lens for understanding creation, the fall, redemption, and restoration.

What It Means to Teach from a Biblical Worldview

- Scripture as the foundation: A biblical worldview treats the Bible as infallible truth shaping how teachers understand knowledge, humanity, and purpose.
- Seeing God in every subject: Math reflects God’s order; grammar helps communicate His truth; science reveals His creation; history shows His redemptive story.
- Formation of hearts and minds: Teaching is not only academic but spiritual—helping students see God’s character, purpose, and love in all learning.

Practical Approach in the Classroom

- Model Christlike character: Show love, patience, gratitude, and stewardship daily.
- Integrate Scripture naturally: Use the Bible to explain concepts, guide discussions, and shape classroom culture.
- Cultivate discernment: Help students evaluate cultural messages through Scripture rather than secular narratives.
- Equip students for real-world engagement: Prepare them to face media, culture, and challenges with biblical truth and the “armor of God.”

Why It Matters

- Teaching from a biblical worldview helps students build a lasting faith, interpret life through God’s story, and understand their identity and purpose in Christ.
